"MURDER WILL OUT."
It will be remembered that some weeks ago there was published an account of a young man named J. W. Schofield being taken out and lynched at Cuba, Tenn. Schofield was a young man of temperate and harmless habits—nothing vindictive, or even immoral in his nature. He came from Virginia, where he left a mother and two sisters. Soon after coming to the city, he met Frank Graves, who keeps the only grocery store at Cuba, and Graves employed him as clerk. The employer always seemed to like his clerk, as also did his wife. Imagine, then, the surprise of the public, when after Schofield had been hung, to find that Graves was arrested as the chief instigator of the crime. Three men—Graves, Poston, and Wisener—were arrested and lodged in jail as the doers of the terrible deed. Well, the whole affair was enveloped in the deepest mystery. Newspaper reporters and gossips endeavored to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion why such terrible vengeance was wreaked on an apparently harmless person.

It was told that Schofield had stolen a few dollars from the money drawer of his employer, and this was why he was so summarily dealt with. Not until yesterday were we apprized of the following additional facts:

"Near the village of Cuba dwells an old man by the name of Carroll, and at his house there boarded a carpenter who was a stranger at that place, by the name of Gouche. This carpenter suddenly disappeared one day, and no one could tell whether he went, and being a stranger, no one bothered himself about him. He disappeared and that was the end of him."

"Now, about the day of Gouche's disappearance, young Schofield felt indisposed in the morning and disinclined to remain in the store; so he told Mrs. Graves that he would take the shot-gun, go into the woods, and shoot a squirrel, which she promised to cook for dinner."

"He went out far into the forest, and he was wandering on in search of game the young man was nearly dropped from his grasp as his eye fell upon a scene of horror. There were a number of men whom he knew, whom he was in the habit of speaking to every day, engaged in hanging a man from the limb of a tree; they were committing murder. Among them were Graves, his employer, and Poston and Wisener (all three now in the county jail), McAtten, the constable, and others. They hung the man. Young Schofield returned home, almost petrified with horrible emotions. He thought the best, in fact the only course for him, was to keep quiet, to say nothing; he had fallen among evil people, and it would not be safe for him to incur their anger; he had resolved to 'keep still.' Gouche was suspected of having money."

"In a few days afterward Graves, being cross as men who engage in such business may be, naturally, he young Schofield had a sort of natural understanding with him, and let out several hints of what he knew. He told him that he had seen something, and that it would not let him alone there would be a scattering among some folks shortly. Of course there were consultations held about the manner in which Schofield was to be disposed of. The usual barbed came on shortly afterward, and on the evening of that day young Schofield was accused of stealing a small sum of money out of Graves' drawer. McAtten, the constable, was told to take charge of him. That night he was taken out and hanged."

The witnesses in the case of Graves, Poston, and Wisener, who are among the most respectable people in that district, have been threatened since Sheriff Wright arrested the above named murderers. Mr. Saterwhite, the principal witness, one who witnessed the hanging of young Schofield, has been threatened; he was shot at a few days since with a rifle. Dr. Irby, another witness, was shot at, and Squire Hester was also threatened. Since the execution of Graves and Poston, the place where the hanging, which young Schofield witnessed in that peaceful hollow, was searched, and the grave uncovered where the man was buried. The flesh was sloughed off his face, but enough was there to permit identification. It was Gouche, the carpenter, who lived with old Squire Carroll, and who was suspected of having money. This is the inside history of the Cuba horror.—Memphis Sun.

The TIGHT LACING. There would be no tight lacing if girls could be made to understand this simple fact—that men dread the thought of marrying a woman who is subject to fits of irritable temper, to bad headaches, and other ailments we need not mention, all of which, everybody knows, are the direct and inevitable product of the compression of the waist. Men like to see a small waist, certainly, but there is a very great difference between the waist which is well formed and in proportion to the rest of the figure, and a waist which is obviously and artificially compressed, to the destruction of that easy and graceful carriage which is one of the chief charms of a woman's appearance. An unnaturally compressed waist is far more certain of detection than a mass of false hair or a faint dusting of rouge can pick out the women who have straightened themselves artificially; and there is no young lady who, to obtain the appearance of a dragon-fly, has been subjecting herself to considerable physical pain, and who has been laying up for herself a pretty store of ailments, which only want time to pronounce themselves, could only see the state of scarcely disguised contempt, and understand the scornful pity which greets the result of her labor, who should have a change of the fashion—and it is merely a fashion. There is nothing intrinsically beautiful in an unnaturally small waist, and it is the fashion to go into the opposite extreme, women would see beauty in padded waists. It is a great misfortune that popular taste never alters in this as in other matters. Observers may notice with what a regular alternation of flow and wide skirts and narrow skirts alternate; how we have the peg-top garments of men followed by square-pointed boots give place attire; how square-pointed boots give place to peak-toed boots, and how the peak toes go out again for the square points. Through all changes women remain true to only one fashion.
